Another Last Chance Rescue storyVon Helen HancoxI've read several of Christy Reece's Last Chance Rescue stories and so should theoretically be familiar with the main characters, although actually I find them not distinct enough to avoid muddling them as they appear in the story. There are lots of names of LCR people in this book and I wasn't really sure who was whom - all these individuals, who have previously had books about them, have merged into identikit characters. The main characters, however, were easy to keep up with as the book focused very heavily on them. Jared Livingston is a loner with a permanent scowl who works for LCR. When he's sent to meet Mia Ryker, who works to rescue stolen children, it's because they think her child abduction case might be related to that of his ex-wife's. When it seems that this is not the case, he assumes this is the last he will see of Mia, a woman he has found very attractive. But Mia returns to Paris to Last Chance Rescue as it looks as if the cases were linked after all. Working alongside Jared it's hard to keep her distance - but she needs him to trust that she knows what she's doing. The stakes are high with several missing children, murders and more. Can Jared and Mia find something special? I enjoyed this book although with some reservations. It felt rather formulaic and seemed similar to several of the previous books. The plot aspect was rather weak (and coincidental) and I found the central villain rather unbelievable. I liked the character development we saw with Jared but overall I felt the story wasn't individual enough and the plot was too shaky.
